NORPAC Foods Sells Canning Business to Seneca Foods

Oregon's leading farmer cooperative to focus investments in frozen category

Salem, Ore. – June 30, 2017 – NORPAC Foods, the Pacific Northwest's largest fruit and vegetable processor, today announced it has sold its canning business to Seneca Foods Corporation (NASDAQ: SENE, SENE).

“In our 93 years as a farmer-owned cooperative, our canning business has been an important part of our history, but over time, it gradually represented a smaller percentage of our overall business,” says Shawn Campbell, president and chief executive officer.

The canning business sale will result in the closure of a small beet processing facility in Salem, however, the company will continue to manufacture other canned products for Seneca through late 2017. NORPAC's canning and labeling plants in Brooks and Stayton, Ore., will be redesigned to accommodate additional frozen vegetable processing in 2018.

Additionally, NORPAC announced it will close its Hermiston, Ore., processing facility by the end of 2017, to consolidate operations into its Brooks, Ore., and Quincy, Wash., facilities.

“The transition away from our canning business and the closure of our Hermiston processing facility will help us drive efficiencies and reduce operational complexities as we invest in continued growth and innovation in our frozen product lines,” Campbell adds.
